

Light behind Death

Photography Competition

As a society, we're not great at talking about death and dying.

It's a topic that is excluded from our everyday conversations because it's too sad, too depressing and maybe even too taboo.

Yet each year 20,000 young people will experience the death of a parent or sibling; thousands more will lose a grandparent, other family member, friend or pet. However, many parents, teachers and young people struggle to know how to talk about it, leaving people feeling isolated and alone.

We would like you to help us open up conversations about death and dying by capturing it on camera: the 'Light behind Death'.

The Light behind Death photography competition is being organised by Gentle Dusk as part of our 'Dying Matters Festival' in Islington.

The competition is open to young people aged 16-19, living or studying in Islington.
